Common English Words From the Internet

According to the Global Language Monitor, about 15 new words are added to the English language every day. And many new words have been created by Internet users.

Here's a short list of common words that were invented online.

Facepalm

If someone is disappointed or embarrassed, they might cover their face with the palm of their hand. This is called a "facepalm."

The word "facepalm" first appeared online in 1996, and is now commonly used as both a verb and a noun. For example, "I facepalmed when I couldn't remember her name" or "I should not have said that. Facepalm!"

Selfie

The word "selfie" is short for "self-portrait photograph." It was first used online in 2002, and has since become a very popular word, thanks to smartphones and social networking sites like Instagram and Facebook.

In 2013, Oxford Dictionary made "selfie" the Word of the Year, and there is even a National Selfie Day!

Spam

Spam is a brand of cooked meat that is sold in a can. But in 1993, people on the Internet started using the word to refer to any email that is not wanted, especially advertisements. You can use "spam" as a noun or a verb. For example, "I get a lot of spam," or "Please stop spamming me."

Troll

A "troll" is a type of magical creature. But on the Internet, a "troll" is someone who tries to lead to problems by writing messages that cause others to fight or become angry. For example, a troll might leave a message on an article about climate change calling it "fake news," just to start a fighting.

(At Linda's home)

Dad: Why are you screaming like that, Linda? You made Mocha bark at your door. Are you all right, honey?

Linda: I was singing along with my favorite K-pop band, and I think I killed it, okay?

Dad: I thought you are not supposed to touch your smartphone until you finish your exam next week, right?

Linda: Sorry, Dad! K-pop is just too good to quit. Here, let me show you the most popular K-pop video on YouTube.

(After a few minutes)

Dad: That was really good.

Linda: See, I told you. 48 With the help of the Internet, people around the world can check out the latest video right away.

Dad: I think their government understands the power of the music industry. By showing K-pop to the world, the tourism in Korea will get better. 49 A big fan like you is helpful to them, too.

Linda: I am a really big fan of K-pop. K-pop is so much more than just music. Through music, I can know more about Korea.

Dad: Now I know why Time magazine called K-pop "South Korea's Greatest Export." However, I saw on the news the other day.

A member of a popular band in Korea waved a Taiwanese flag on a show, 50. She ended up having to say sorry for it.

Linda: I know the news, and I had a discussion with my friends at school. It was sad she had to say sorry for showing where she is from. Don't worry! Let's watch her music video to support her!

Dad: Okay... but you have to promise me this is the last one!

Linda: Of course! Come on! Sing along with it, Dad!
