One day when Charles went hiking in the mountains, he found a big old house covered by thick, tall grass. He remembered his grandfather once told him there was a ghost house just around where he was now. Charles decided to get into the house and take a look. The moment he entered the house, some bats were scared to fly away. Charles walked around the house with the flashlight(手電筒) of his cellphone, and he saw spiders and insects here and there. All the tables and desks were covered with mud(泥土). There were a few blankets on the ground. Then he found something moving under one of them. Charles felt his body shaking. However, he made up his mind to move the blanket with his shaking hand. At that moment, a mouse ran out of it very quickly. Charles was scared and fell on the ground. For the next few minutes, nothing else happened. Charles looked around and thought of what his grandfather had told him. "Come on! That's it!" He laughed, stood up, and walked out of the house.

Face masks have become a very important part of our lives. They help protect(保護) us from getting sick, and protect others when we are sick. Face masks have become especially useful during the coronavirus pandemic(新冠肺炎). But unluckily, face masks are difficult to recycle(回收). Because of this, they have become part of a big problem for the Earth. That is, a lot of plastic(塑膠) is ending up on beaches, in oceans and seas, and in many places where it should not be. One report says 194 billion face masks are being used by people around the world every day. Swimmers and divers(潛水者) say they have started to see face masks floating(漂浮) in the ocean. Face masks are made from plastic, and if it is not recycled, plastic takes a long time to disappear(消失) from the Earth. Scientists(科學家) say a face mask could take around 450 years to start to disappear! That's a lot longer than any of us will live. One charity(愛心組織) in the UK has asked the government(政府) to tell people to start using reusable masks. This way, people may use a mask many times and would use less masks every day, and it may be a good way to reduce(減少). But face masks are still difficult to recycle, and scientists think they are the next big part of the nature problem that we need to think about carefully.

In what way do you think we could solve this problem, and stop face masks ending up in the ocean?
